Wheres the Pilot is a tale of a Seeker's journey through five foreign lands to uncover the Truth within himself and the world he exists in, meeting many people from different cultures and walks of life, learning about the diversity of humanity while trying to discover the answer to a never-ending riddle. Excerpt: Chapter 1: Kashmir Sometime in the late summer of 1997 I found myself riding on the rooftop of a bus in the middle of the Indian Himalaya. Why was I there? What was I doing? My thoughts floated in the air as the majestic mountain landscape passed by. It seemed as if it was all some surreal dream. I never imagined one could get so high spiritually or physically for that matter. We were somewhere around 4000 meters (13000 feet) and climbing. The limited oxygen at this elevation has serious strange effects on the human brain. I was leaving Ladakh behind, leaving the imposing and isolated peaks, leaving the serenity and silence of a peaceful land and heading into a war zone. My destination was Srinagar, the capital of the ethnically troubled and divided region of Kashmir. Why was I going to this far-flung destination? Before embarking on this trip to India I felt overwhelmingly drawn to Kashmir. I had heard the stories and read the headlines: Civil unrest worsens in Srinagar, Hand grenades thrown into bus stand in Pahalgam, Five Western backpackers kidnapped and beheaded while trekking in the mountains. Still, I had made up my mind: I was going. And no one could stop me. I learned at an early age not to believe everything you read in the media. Most...
