Excerpt: . else to do, she began to sing a little song, which Miss Anne had taught her. She knew only one verse, but she sang this verse two or three times oveij louder and louder each time, and her voice resounded merrily through all that part of the house. Some cWldreIMn/ when they wake up and find themselves alone; some call out aloud for somebody to come; and others sing. Thus there are three ways; and the singing is the best of all the three;--except, indeed, for veiy little children, who are not old enough to sing or to call, and who, therefore, cannot do anything but cry. They heard Lucy s singing in the parlor, and Miss Anne came immediately to see her. She gave her a picture-book to amuse herself with for a time, and went away again; but in about a quarter of an hour she came...
