

Death by Lethal Ingestion A Self-Imposed Sentence for Dietary Disobedience

By Don Harris

Outskirts Press. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 88 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.2in. Why does God sometimes not heal? Is it a sin to eat so-called forbidden foods? Are the Old Testament dietary laws still relevant today? These questions and more are answered by the author in a straightforward and balanced, but uncompromising way. For those who think their mind is made up and none of this really matters, this book is a personal challenge to read. Those who have been diagnosed with cancer or other related disease or chronic illness, are even offered the possibility of hope and healing within the pages of Death by Lethal Ingestion. Since the beginning of human history, deception about food has resulted in certain (albeit not sudden) physical death. Many people, particularly Christians, around the world have bought into the notion that all things are OK if their indulgence is in moderation. The author, Don Harris, takes a rare and bold approach to debunking that myth as it relates not only to food choices, but also to the broader matters of spiritual disciplines. He goes beyond the milk and cereal approach and serves up the meat of the Bible in a...
