Doubtless, so me addition should be made for quantities too small to be assessed, or if assessed, only under the minute tithes. Hence 1,500 will not be above the probable value. With what sum does this correspond at the present day 1 It seems impossible to obtain a trustworthy answer. The result of a rather wide examination of sources of information, is that the present value of money, pounds, shillings, and pence, is probably more than three times the value of the period of this record. It will, therefore, be within the truth to assume that the annual value of the crop in Suffolk was 5,000 in present money. This is not much for a county. But the cultivation was probably in the main for domestic use. To some extent, perhaps, in districts...
