Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: . let me emphasize two findings which vary greatly in individual cases. These are: (a) symptoms referable to the bladder and (b) the degree of evidence of infection as found in the examination of the urine. I will dwell upon the first one particularly because one encounters so many cases of renal infection in which symptoms such as increased frequency, painful urination, etc., are but little complained of. In fact, even experienced clinicians are apt to be led astray and demand more evidence in the form of bladder irritation before being willing to even consider the urinary tract as the source of the symptoms. We often see cases of the pyelitis of pregnancy and of the puerperium in which the bladder disturbances attract our attention at once, while in others these are entirely lacking, as will be seen in the case which I will next present. This patient is a twenty-year-old primipara. She was confined in this hospital and seemed perfectly well until about the end of the third week of the puerperium, when her present illness began suddenly with a chill, followed by high fever and a sweat. Examination of the internal genitalia failed to reveal any possible cause for the chills and temperature. There were absolutely no localizing symptoms anywhere, especially none referable to the urinary tract, for three weeks after this stormy onset. Blood-cultures were negative throughout this period, during which the cycles of chills, fever, and sweats recurred at irregular intervals (Fig....
