Excerpt: .Chatting and hesitation on their part followed. But you do not proceed to business, gentlemen, said Mazzini; I believe your intention is to kill me. The astounded miscreants fell on their knees, and at length departed with the generous pardon accorded them, whilst a longer puff of smoke than usual was the only malediction sent after them. Thackeray says that the man who smokes has a great advantage in conversation. You may, he says, stop talking if you like, but the breaks of silence never seem disagreeable, being filled up by the puffing of the smoke; hence there is no awkwardness in resuming the conversation, no straining for effect, sentiments are delivered in a grave, easy manner. The cigar harmonizes the society, and soothes at once the speaker and the subject whereon he converses. I have no doubt that it is from the habit of smoking that Turks and American Indians are such monstrous well-bred men. How precious a cigar may be to a smoker is illustrated by an anecdote told by Bismarck himself, who says that at Koniggratz he had only one cigar in his pocket, which he carefully guarded as a miser does his treasure. He looked forward to the happy hour when he should enjoy it, after the battle. But, he says, I had miscalculated my chances. A poor dragoon lay helpless, with both arms crushed, murmuring for something to refresh him. I felt in my pockets, and found that I had...
