Brand New Book. Excerpt from Country Towns, and the Place They Fill in Modern Civilization Nor are cities without an interest in the social condition of those small towns, from which, as from little centres, improvement radiates into the districts around; for it was-admitted in the Report of the Census of 1851 that a large proportion of city inhabitants are born in the country. Can we doubt that what the country makes them at first will have its effect on that which the city makes them at last? If the material be sound, it may be an open question whether the city will fashion it into greater completeness for good or evil; but if the material be rotten, what own the fabric be?
