In ceasing its relationship to the Federal Government, Hampton depends upon its own resources and those of its friends. Nevertheless, Hampton, in view of the long-continued Federal support, can give to the general public the benefit of a statement of her stewardship and by so doing be of great assistance to other institutions with similar problems in industrial and vocational education. Considerable detail has been included for the benefit of those who desire to study more intimately the scope and content of work carried on in a school of this type. Notwithstanding the successes of the several departments of the institute, the members of the staff would be the last to feel that they had reached perfection. Consequently it is believed that those who are striving to develop industrial education on a higher plane will be greatly encouraged and benefited by reading these pages. Not only the land-grant colleges for the colored race, but also many of our industrial institutions for whites, need a greater vision of their work.
