Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.In Enough of Us: Why We Should Think Twice Before Making Children, authors Cheryl and Ellis Levinson present their controversial arguments in a study that explores the choice to remain childfree and the ramifications of choosing to procreate, making the case that procreating is a high-stakes gamble that puts children and the entire planet at risk. Cheryl and Ellis argue that having children is the most selfish decision that otherwise moral people make. In Enough of Us, they provide evidence to support their claims that the risks to children and the adults they become are higher than most people imagine. They believe that the human population wreaks havoc upon the Earth because, as they say, enough of us already exist. An excerpt from Enough of Us Around the world, hundreds of millions of children suffer. Birth defects, abusive or inadequate parenting, genetic predisposition, environmental pollution, poor nutrition, civil upheaval, and an almost endless litany of sources of suffering stand in the shadows waiting to inflict their misery on potential victims. When tragedy strikes and parents cry out, Why...
