Bartley came home elate from Miss Kingsbury s entertainment It was something like the social success which he used to picture to himself He had been flattered by the attention specially paid him, and he did not detect the imposition. He was half-starved, but he meant to have up some cold meat and bottled beer, and talk it all over with Marcia. She did not seem inclined to talk it over on their way home, and when they entered their own door she pushed in and ran up-stairs. Why, where are you going, Marcia? he called after her. To bed! she replied, closing the door after her with a crash of unmistakable significance. Bartley stood a moment in the fury that tempted him to pursue her with a taunt, and then leave her to work herself out of the transport of senseless jealousy she had wrought herself into. But he set his teeth, and, full of inward cursing, he followed her up-stairs with a slow, dogged step. He took her in his arms without a word, and held her fast, while his anger changed to pity, and then to laughing. When it came to that, she put up her arms, which she had kept rigidly at her side, and laid them round his neck, and began softly to cry on his breast Oh, I m not myself at all, any more! she moaned penitently. Then this is very improper--for me,...
