I have done my best to trace in this volume the development of the arts of peace as well as of the outbreaks, the struggles, and the desolations of war. We have had during these more recent days some definite and I trust memorable attempts to bring about a combination among the great Powers of the world for the establishment of an international tribunal having for its work the adoption of a common code which should hold the war spirit in check and subject it to healthful control from the principles of equity and the spirit of peace. Thus far nothing much has come in practical effect from the founding of such a tribunal, but it is, to say the least of it, a memorable era in history when the tribunal has been actually founded by the co-operation of all the great Powers and of the smaller Powers as well, and the principles of equity and of peace are thus recognised as entitled to have some legalised and commonly accepted control over the destinies of nations. The parliament of man, the federation of the world, has not yet come into genuine working order, but it must not be regarded as a mere philosophical forecast or a poetic fantasy. Nothing certainly can be more remarkable in the developments of later years than the growth which we can see in the influence of popular opinion all through the civilised world. Education has been spreading everywhere, and no where more, in proportion at least, than in our own country, where...
