Relationship betweenand log P used in the brightness-distance relationship-B CPD; the diamonds are Garstangs estimates ofand the solid line shows a linear fit to those points. 3. 1. 2 Zenith-Angle Effects The brightness-distance relationship does not include a model for the angular effects on observed brightness. It is used to compute brightness in the zenith direction (i. e. , looking straight up) only. To correct this, the effects of off-angle views and the corresponding corrections to the zenith brightness were made. Berry (12) points out that, to a first approximation, we can assume that light originating from a city is scattered through an optically thin uniform layer of the atmosphere. The brightness of the layer is then proportional to a line-of-sight (LOS) thickness through the scattering layer. The LOS through a layer is proportional to the secant of the zenith angle; therefore, city lights, when viewed from far away, would appear to increase in brightness as the secant of the zenith angle. To emulate this, a function was introduced to correct the zenith brightness for variations in zenith angle: $f(z) \sec(z)$, (2) where A is a constant of proportionality determined from empirical data and z is the zenith angle in degrees. Using data from Berry (12), Walker (3), and Garstang (7...
