Saints Sinners 2010: New Fiction from the Festival

By Paul J. Willis

Queer Mojo. Paperback. Condition: New. 250 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.8in. Saints and Sinners 2010: New Fiction from the Festival contains a mixture of short fiction representing many genres and styles as well as a diverse number of themes and experiences. It was truly a difficult task for the judges to select a winner and two runner-ups from over a 100 entries. The completely-blind, three-tier judging process that was used yield what we think is a wonderful set of stories. The finalists for our first annual short fiction contest were Danny Bracco, Nathan Burgoine, Emily M. Danforth, James Driggers, Jack Fritscher, Wayne Lee Gay, William Holden, James Nolan, Steve Scott and Shawn Syms. There are five stories from the contest included in this volume along with works by established authors. The winning story, Ondine by Wayne Lee Gay (Denton, TX), is a musical tale of both longing and awakening. The two runners-ups are as different from each other as, well, as Saints and Sinners. Dancing Pink Roses by Danny Bracco (San Francisco, CA) is a sensual story of personal discovery both enlightening and painful. Jesus is My BFF by James Driggers (Asheville, NC) weaves a complex story of intolerance,...
