Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Meredith Revisited and Other Essays The following twelve essays, written at different times in the last eight years, deal with very different writers representative of very different literatures. At first sight there is very little resemblance between Homer and Ibsen, Meredith and Newman, Cicero and Mr. J. D. Beresford. But any method of criticism which is based on really sound foundations must arrive at some general conclusions which it should be possible to apply to writers even as distantly related as those whose works are treated of in these pages. Criticism, to be successful, must not be one-sided. It should view with sympathy, or attempt to view with sympathy, writers of every clime and every age, and though it must be far from sitting on the fence, it must be regard with impartial favour the combatants in the secular struggle between the ancients and the moderns, neither contemning the ancients as passe or effete because they are ancient, nor refusing moderns the privileges of genius because they were born in the nineteenth (or twentieth !) century. It must not shirk the difficult task of appraising those who have not received the testamur of many ages, though it must not make a cult of the dernier cri. And, therefore, there may be some justification - one hopes - for including in a single volume so many different names besides the plea which Samuel Butler wittily advances for publishing that of which the world seems in no urgent need, particularly in an age when conditions seem to have conspired for the destruction of the writer unless he be a novelist. Some of the essays herein included were...
