It certainly yields in great plenty the coral./lcervulariz penfayona, which.lu1 chison marks o. characteristic fossil in his Middle Devonian, but, 50 far as he knows, this organism is not found elsewhere in the district; moreover, the Upper Silurian coral, C/z.ono p/ 1///ma pe/folzidzmz, occurs at Ramsleigh but in no other Devonian locality, so the locality is rather a puzzling one. Professor L. de Koninck considers that the Torquay beds correspond to the psainmites of the Rhine, while those of Newton would represent those of the Eifel. The Devonian formation is therefore-composed of a very remarkable series of deposits, which have attracted much interest in this country as well as upon the Continent and in America, and been the subject of many important researches and works by some of our most able geologists and palaeontologists, among whom we may mention...
