Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Theatre, Vol. 3: A Monthly Review and Magazine; August to December, 1879 It is, however, obvious that irresponsible Opinion actuated or at any rate influenced in this manner has little intrinsic value, and carries with it little real weight. It is worth noting as the natural consequence of a certain mistaken method of attempting to win wholesale and unhesitating acceptance of the work of admirable foreign artists, instead of admitting that their achievements, like those of their rivals in this country, have to be examined in detail, and received or rejected upon their merits. But without taking any heed, on the one hand, of the too hearty appreciation which loses its critical power in its generous applause, or on the other, of the petty carping which finds fault wherever fault is sought, there is plenty of room for a Dispassionate comparison of the efforts of our recent visitors with those of the players who night after night act in our midst. The distinctions between the two schools of art are broad and readily defined; having regard to...
