Excerpt from The Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, Vol. 1: Volume the First; 1840. - On the present State of the Science of Agriculture in England. By Philip Pusey, Esq., M. P., F. R. and G. S. Read March 13, 1839. Though the national importance of husbandry will be at once admitted by every one, it may be well at the outset of our undertaking not to content ourselves with a general notion of that importance, but to look for a moment at some of the items which constitute its annual value. The wheat produced in England and Wales is estimated by Mr. Mac Culloch, one year with another, at 12, 350, 000 quarters. This single head of produce, therefore, at an average price of 50s., will amount to nearly 31 million pounds sterling, yearly. The oats and beans have been reckoned at 13, 500, 000 quarters, and will give another head of 17 12 millions sterling per annum. The grass-lands, again, are supposed to yield, year by year, produce worth very nearly 60 millions sterling, (59, 500, 000.) The practical inference to be drawn from these large numbers is obviously this, - that, if by any improved process it be possible to add even in a small proportion to the average acreable produce either of arable or pasture land, this increase, small as it may seem, may be in fact a very large addition to our national wealth. The average produce of wheat, for instance, is stated at 26 bushels per acre: if, by a better selection of seed, we could raise this amount to 27 bushels only, a supposition by no means unlikely,...
