Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: . employ, there are means of stiffening the requirements. A greater care in approving schools would help. The New England Certificate Board has shown by seventeen years of experience that a policy of renewing the certificate privilege absolutely on the basis of the work done in college by the product of the school in question will eventually place the certificate on a par with examinations for reliability. Reduction in the number of conditions allowed on admission would help to solve the problem. The allowance is generally about two units, though some colleges admit with three or even more units of condition, and even advertise the fact. If there is to be a higher standard of admission, it would be reasonable to give the preference to those pupils who have completed the full requirements over those who are short half a year or more in preparation, and whose very weakness in that respect shows that they are just the individuals who should not be expected or even allowed to do a lot of extra work in college. The comparatively recent practice in some colleges of refusing to accept certificates for those who stood in the lowest third of their class in high school, or even the lower half, as is the practice at Oberlin and elsewhere, has much to commend it, since those with the highest averages, even, in a weak school, will be likely to have the mental qualities that promise success in college. The plan...
