In this case the facts certainly demonstrate that a change in the constitution of the medium, of such a character as to affect the metabolic processes, brings about a change in the localization of a specific organ, the pharynx. Another case which involves not merely localization but number of parts as well, concerns the eye-spots. Normally two eyespots, symmetrically placed, appear in Planaria in regulation as well as in ontogeny. As noted above, however, we find that short pieces in water, especially those from the middle region of the body, often give rise to only one median eye-spot. In fact the formation of a single eye-spot instead of two is the first indication of decreased or incomplete ability to form a head. If we compare pieces of different lengths with anterior ends at the same level of the...
