A tub of grimy suds is before the fire. The last Gubbins offshoot, cetat. Five years, is on a truckle bedstead in a corner of the reception room. Ofi shoot No. 2 is being rubbed down by the eldest daughter, the fair Jemima. The mother is engaged in the needful weekly performance of scouring the family heir. All the darling children (j emima excepted) are undergoing their Saturday Wash. Hence the tub of water and. Its griminess. The junior branches being in bed, Mr. Gubbins puts down his pipe, Mrs. Gubbins puts on her bonnet and shawl, and Miss J emima arrays herself in a hat, from beneath which there hangs a net containing the young lady s hair, which by the tallowy light of the room lookalike a collection of alarmed kittens tails. Father pockets a half-pint medicine bottle, mother and daughter each take a large basket. And thus equipped they sally forth to market. Not, however, before Mrs. Gubbins with maternal solicitude has exhorted the ground ?oor-back mangle to go to the children if they cry. The ground ?oor-back mangle, who has a vision of some thing short: and strong, in the form of speerits, about two hours later, readily promises to look after the brats. Through November mud and November darkness, the latter rendered uncomfortably visible by London gas, glimmering through dirty and unfrequent lamps, the Gub bins, discussing to-morrow s dinner, en route, walk through sundry by-streets, until they emerge in Shoreditch, and behold a scene not easily described and never to be forgotten.
