Not illustrated. 1859 Excerpt: . . . What is the effect of this evidence To establish all that I hare said, that the whole poor-house system is bad, and rotten to the core. I have never asserted that the Cork workhouse was one whit worse than any other in the kingdom, nor do I believe it. I regret that many labouring under this impression, yourself among the number, should have hastily taken up arms in defence of a system that is literally soaked in the lifes blood of innocent children, whose only crime has been their poverty and their orphanage. I have the honor to remain, Sib, Your obedient Servant, JOHN ARNOTT. SECTION V. The Prevalence Of Scrofula In The Cork workHouse. The Witnesses Examined. Being anxious to know how the appearance of these poor children would strike other persons, as well as myself, I requested his Lordship the Bishop of Cork, and one of the Chaplains, and the Medical officer of Spike Island, to visit the workhouse. The following is the Bishops letter: --The Palace, Cork, May 2nd, 1859. My Deak Mb. Mayok, You have requested me to state to you what impression has been left upon my mind, in reference to the young people in the poor-house, by the visit I made to it the othor day. I have since then read over your minute of the 6th of April last. I do not mean to enter into the statistics of that minute; nor is it necessary that I...
