Excerpt: :joys and sorrows, was away without possibility of recall. His friendly offices could bring no healing or mitigation of the pain that was consuming him. Even the medical knowledge he had himself acquired for the physical benefit of others was of no avail when quivering with pain; he could only endure. Secretary Morton, another stalwart of the colony, in recording his death, gives evidence of his Christian faith when he says: He growing very ancient became sick of the stone, or stranguillon, whereof, after suffering of much dolorous pain, he fell asleep in the Lord, and was honorably buried at Duxbury. All doubts about the place of his interment being solved, it was agreed to place natural boulders on the graves of Myles Standish, his daughter, and daughter-in-law. The one on the Captain s grave weighed about five tons, and is marked on its face with the name of Myles Standish, in threeinch block sunken letters. The boulders marking the graves of Lora and Mary Dingley Standish are smaller, and were obtained from the Captain s old farm at South Duxbury. Cannon and shell, the gift of the Navy Department, are placed in position around the three graves. The Daughters of the Revolution, on Monday, September 30, 1895, erected a cairn of stones to commemorate the landing of Myles Standish at Sqantum Head, September 30, 1621, a promontory which juts out into the water of Boston Bay. It is ten feet in height, and...
