Excerpt: . . . for warlike purposes than was the North, and the people of the latter section were ignorant of this fact also. All over the free States the newspaper editors and local orators, great and small, dabbled fiercely in patriotic statesmanship. They united in assuring the President that they had supplied him with an army, and that he was in duty bound to crush the Rebellion with it. The prevalent idea of army-movements appears to have been borrowed from the black and white squares of a checker-board and their easily transferable buttons. Substitute the seceded territory for the checkerboard, and the Presidents obvious business was to win the game at once, while so many eager people were looking on and were waiting impatiently to see him do it. The cry of On to Richmond! now began to rise, with a full-throated volume which threatened to drown...
