Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .in quest of runaway property the right to seize upon the same. The two white men were most brutal-looking fellows, and we were taught to regard all traders in human commodity as brutes. There were masters in Kentucky who never bought or sold a negro, and these constituted the real aristocracy of the commonwealth. In a manner that did not smack pleasantly of politeness, one of the men, who introduced himself as Mr. Croft, requested food and lodging for the night. These bucks ran away from the Colonel night before last; and, as the main drove is to come along not far from here, I lowed we d rest here and to-morrow mornin cut across the county and head em off. My partner, here, is Mr. Vance. It was evident that they had gathered no hint as to the abolition principles of the professor; and I expected him to rage, in a smothered way at least, but was surprised to see him smile upon the ruffians and their three-linked chain of black flesh. Beneath our house was a cellar walled with stone and lighted by only one small window not more than a foot square. With alacrity he flung up the cellar door, this believer in the brotherhood of man, and told Mr. Croft that he might with safety therein immure his rebellious charge. Nor did Mrs. Emory protest when thus her house was to be made a prison. Nan began to whimper, seeing the blood...
