Excerpt from History of the Woodbine Colony An idea of the rapid growth of this enterprise can be had from the fact that when the clothing factory was started, four year ago, they employed ninety people; six months later their payroll had increased to 150, and today six hundred souls find pleasant and profitable employment here; employment that it would be impossible for them to duplicate anywhere else. No labor troubles or hard times mar the tranquility of their life, but they have steady work under the most advantageous conditions.
