Excerpt: . . . extends through the whole spine. The author ventures to say that he has prescribed for not less than fifteen hundred patients with this disease, many of whom have suffered many things of several physicians, and rather grew worse. CAUsEs. --This affection is common both to the rich and to the poor--to the laborious and to the indolent. Over-exertion of the bodily powers, excessive uterine discharges, derangement of the digestive organs, feeble constitution, and occasionally great mental anxiety, seem to be occasions of this disease. Among females of a laborious life, irritation of the spine is very frequent, and seems to arise from long continued hard labor. TRnArntEnr. --Upon my first acquaintance with this disease, I used caustic issues over the spine, afterwards repeated blistering, administering internally a pill composed of three grains of the sun-dried extract of conium, and four or five grains of the oxide or carbonate of iron, three limes a day, occasionally increasing the dose of the extract to six grains. I had pursued this course for several years, when a poor laboring woman applied to me for advice with this complaint. I directed blistering, as usual; but she said she could not afford to abstain from labor, to be blistered. I advised her to try the pills alone, as possibly they might do her some good, though they might not cure her. She seemed to do as well with the pills alone as others with the issues and blisters. For...
