Excerpt from Report on the Taxation of Life Insurance Companies by the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation, Committee on Ways and Means, U. S. House of Representatives: December 31, 1958 For the period 1942 through 1948 what in effect were two different methods of determining the appropriate size of the reserve deduction for the entire industry were used and then combined into a single industrywide ratio. One method of computing the industrywide, reserve deduction was to determine the average deduction for the entire industry in each prior year. For the 2 years 1949 and 1950, with certain minor adjustments, this was in fact the only method used in computing the ratio. The second element in the 1942 formula applied to total industry reserves of the prior year an assumed interest rate of 314 percent. This deduction, weighted 35 percent, together with the industrywide prior year s experience deduction weighted 65. Percent, then was expressed as a percentage of industrywide investment income for the prior year. The percentage so derived was then applied to the individual investment income of each company to determine its individual reserve deduction.
