About fifteen years ago, when I first began to teach the Art of Expression, I found a constant demand for instruction in Public Speaking. The student would ask, Can you give me some definite steps which, if followed, would lead to confidence and power when I seek to persuade or convince? Are there any laws or rules that would be direct, practical helps? And I found myself compelled to admit that I knew of very few; that all the writers on Rhetoric, from Aristotle down, also the authorities on Logic and Argumentation, failed right here. True, there were many isolated aids, but nothing like a well-ordered, practical system was to be found. In fact, there was more than a half truth in the couplet: All a rhetorician s rules Teach him but to name his tools. These conditions in respect to the field of Public Speaking constantly forced themselves upon me. I kept asking myself is it possible that a department of such vast importance as that of social, business and professional speech must rely for its effectiveness almost solely on impulse?
