Excerpt from The 1944 Yackety Yack Chapel Hill is an ideal, a symbol for which we are fighting. The faith, the efforts, the conscientious work and accomplishments of those who believe in this ideal are directed towards making the Carolina of the future even better than the Carolina of the past. This struggle to keep the best of Carolina intact through these critical days is a fight more important than winning the Duke Carolina game. It will be won by those who care; the various people united by their dream for the future of this University. This unity is an intangible thing. It is not the unity of small cliques, of fraternities, sororities, clubs, organizations. It is the unity of an entire student body, Navy, Army, Marine, and civilian students, now recognizing the seriousness of today. When the tension is gone, when saddle shoes and open necked shirts are seen again in classrooms, the students will once again split into many different factions. But now, though their uniforms are different, they are alike. By some thing down inside they are bound together.
