John Howard Worcester: In a Discourse Delivered at Hollis, N. H. On Sabbath, January 24, 1864 The circumstances which now call us together though painful in their connections are neither new, nor strange. This is a day of unhappy and cruel warfare, and we have come to bury a young soldier who has died honorably, and heroically in the defence of his country. There is scarcely a village in all our loyal borders, which has not participated in like painful scenes. There is hardly a church bell that has not tolled the knell of some gallant soldier; nor a cemetery which does not hold the like honored dust. We now come to lay down another martyr with the great company scattered over a thousand battle-fields, and in our quiet church yards. Were we to seek a passage from the sacred page around which to cluster a few thoughts, as an appropriate tribute to the memory of our young friend, perhaps we could find none more expressive of his character, and his career as a soldier, than the words of the young Persian Queen found in Esther 4:16 - So will I go - and if I perish, I perish. Such were often substantially his utterances, while contemplating his duty to enter the service of his country. A word or two in explanation of the circumstances in which these words were spoken, will show their relevancy to the case before us. Through the instigation of a popular, and perfidious counselor at the Persian Court, a cruel decree had been issued from the throne that the Jewish people, then in...
