Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Minister's Wife, Vol. 3 of 3 Nothing had occurred on Loch Diarmid for ages which had made so intense a sensation in the district as the death of the minister. The whole country bubbled up and seethed about that one house on the slope, - the Manse, peaceablest of habitations, a few days ago so full of quiet happiness, but now shrouded in a veil of horror and woe. Was it accident, or was it murder? At first the opinion of the country-side inclined strongly in favour of the former supposition. The beast was spirity - too spirity for a man of Mr. Lothian's age; and the night was stormy and dark; and he had not nor could have any enemy - and he was not robbed. It soon, however, became known that there was an actual witness of the tragedy, whose deposition would set all doubts at rest.
