But I think you have not scrupled to acknowledge that you had a lover? There was one, who, not less anxious for my welfare than my uncle, looked on me with even more of tenderness, and would fain. have been my protector through life. I-- Would fain have seen him gratified in this., To have known him blest would have been the dearest joy on earth my heart could taste; but I will confess, if one selfish thought was ever known to me, it was the wish that his society might be the solace of my future years. And would nought suffice but his? Madam? Was he the only man whose society could cheer your heart? The presence of my uncle I have ever coveted. But I speak of a lover. Have you seen but one in that character whose converse might cheer you? But one, madam; nor would I see another. Child, you know not yourself. You love him of whom you have spoken, beT cause on him your attention was first particularly fixed. But nature has happily fashioned woman s heart on a less exclusive plan than the giddy girl en? amoured of her first admirer can suppose. This you shall shortly prove. I understand not-- I know that explanation must be needful, and will supply it. You fairly confessed yourself sad at heart, when brought here to pass a life, which may be...
