Excerpt from Virginia: Address Before the Washington and Jefferson Societies, of the University of Virginia June 30, 1868 If, in what I say, there be a lesson worth learning, it will be Of equal application from Mount Vernon to the Rio Grande. I have thought it safest gentlemen to recite this slight prologue, that you may have better guidance through my rambling Speech, that you may know the goal we aim for, although we may go ever SO deviously, through uneven, tangled, and, it may be, perilous paths. Keep in your minds the glory of Virginia, and my tinkling baubles will not mislead you very far. There was a time - a long time - when as citizens of the State of Virginia, and thereby, citizens Of the United States of America, we held our estate by a tenure unknown to the civil institutions of any other people. Each man s fealty was his own due, and he rendered service at his own will. Near thirty millions of people were obe client to the laws made by themselves, and to no other earthly power. Under these laws, self-imposed, order reigned, and liberty was regu lated in its enjoyment, and, as we believed, was assured in its trans mission. The whole Compulsion was to do right - the sole restraint was to prevent wrong. Constitutions, laws, customs, and habitudes, seemed to insure perpetual freedom and make us the instruments of God s highest purposes for man, in our spontaneous adaptation of His decrees to our uses. The State of Virginia had created the constitution of the United States, the foundation principle of which was the confederation Of Sovereignties for the purpose Of mutually ensuring...
