Excerpt: .across a portion of ground three more skeletons were found, all more or less contracted. Over the head of one was a very fine Saxon urn full of the fibres of the roots of a neighbouring tree. The urn was profusely marked, and in good preservation. With another were several beads of glass and amber, a fine leaf-shaped flint arrow head, fragments of urns, and charcoal. I may here remark that I never found a decayed tooth. Some had been much worn, but they fitted even and close all round. The Amphitheatre At Hessleskew. The Amphitheatre at Hessleskew is about two hundred yards in circumference, and appears to have been about ten or twelve feet in uniform depth. The arena is now a plantation of trees of about sixty years growth, and when these trees were planted, numerous animal bones were found in the floor of the pit. Near the pit, in the middle of a field, is an ancient well, now partly filled up, which, fifty years ago, was sounded to a depth of three hundred feet. Near the well are some old foundations, which can be traced continuously for about fifty yards. Taking the pit as a centre, in a radius of about one mile, more antiquities have been found at different times, which mark a longer period of time than perhaps any other uninhabited part of the country--over two hundred tumuli, stone, bronze, and iron weapons and ornaments, remains of harness,...
