Excerpt from A Village Library in Massachusetts: The Story of Its Upbuilding The subject of the next travelling library was English architecture. There were twenty volumes and sixtythree pictures, the pictures Of especial interest being those of English cathedrals. As my contribution to the pro gram Of the local grange I chose An Evening in Eng land and Scotland, and exhibited the pictures of the travelling library, supplemented by some of my own, as signing descriptive sketches Oi the subjects represented to various members. The pictures were hung in the town hall, where the meetings of the grange were held, and. The exhibition was afterwards visited by other towns people and by school pupils. The next year we had a travelling library on Rome consisting of twenty-three books and one hundred and forty-five pictures. That year we had a winter study circle composed of people Of all ages and both sexes, and we took up the study Of Roman history as illustrated by the photographs. Several people from the adjoining town of Wales attended some of these meetings. One of these friends, then a grammar-school teacher, afterwards received an appointment to teach Roman history in a city high school, and he has spoken Of those um-academic evenings in Rome as of great advantage to him in his teaching.
