Leicester Junction, Center Rutland, North Clarendon and East Wallingford, to correspond reasonably with the business at these stations, respectively, and comport modestly with present standards. A small depot should also be built at Healdville, where a box car is now used. The City of Rutland should have a modern union depot, corresponding to its commercial importance and size, as soon as the finances of the railroad company will warrant it, and the greater public demands of the road have been fairly met. The same may be said concerning the passenger depot at Bellows Falls. The criticisms of the previous Hoard could well be repeated at this time. The sanitary condition of this depot is extremely poor, and has continued to be about the worst in the State. The sanitary condition of the depots generally on the line is good and they are well kept...
