XVIII to-morrow And To-morrow And To-morrow As the second autumn approached, my arrangements for seeding the new ground having been made, and a teaching position offering in Prineville, I decided to close Broadview for the winter and move into town. I procured a tent house and chicken yard on the edge of town and lived there throughout the teaching term, finding an excellent market for eggs and chickens. Each week-end I rode out to Broadview to sleep--a sixty-mile round trip, in which I delighted as often as a really good horse was available. About the fifteenth of October I found my grain all in. I am glad to chronicle that this feat was at last accomplished by one of the pioneers--a son of Aunt Polly. About the first of November I found my chicken house in ruins and my milo maize evaporated--seemingly by...
