The book includes more than 90 illustrations. The Awakening is a book by Leo Tolstoy written during the period of 1889-1899. This is the translation by William E. Smith, which is easy to read and understand. It is one of the best translations of the work ever published. It tells the story of a nobleman overburdened with the sin he has committed. This sin concerns a young peasant woman whom he seduced and then left. He lives the ordinary life of a self-proud rich man until he encounters his former lover. The place where they see each other is the court, and the girl is being accused. Being a religious person, baptized in the Orthodox faith, Tolstoy declared expressly in a number of his works written during the last two decades of his life, especially in the novel The Awakening, that he denied some of the major dogmas of the Russian Orthodox Church. In The Awakening, he depicted the clergy as perfunctory ritual performers. Many found the cold and cynical Toporov to resemble K. Pobedonostsev, the Ober-Procurator of the Most Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church. The Synod succeeded in insisting on banning Tolstoy's novel The Awakening for disrespectful statements on the Orthodox Church and Christianity back in 1901. Leo Tolstoy criticized the Russian Orthodox Church in harsh terms for postponing the original Christian ideals to its own interests. The Russian Ministry of Interior passed a circular order prohibiting the publication of any telegrams, news, and articles expressing sympathy with the writer and criticizing the Synod's decision. However, Russian glass plant workers presented Tolstoy with a large lump of glass. The lump had the following engraved...
