Methinks that some disaster nears, for, as The future looms afore me, daunts my spirit, And speculation fails. What shriek is this, Which, pealing through the channel of my ear, Bids horror drown the din? Thou fool! tis but The scream of some nigh hovering night owl--yet It seemed despairing voice of sinful soul, Remonstrant at the flame of punishment. Some thinnish flitting shade the chamber roams--. For I did hear a whisper. Fancy, thou Art trait rous, and dost fill my heedful soul With mentionless alarms. What weight of dread is press d upon my brain! And what a sense of drowsy numbness creeps Across my frame. The blood is chilled--it freezes, The arteries choke! Royal William, arouse thee! Tis telling midnight! Hark--the change of watch-- Tis even now the ripened point of time When ghostly shadows walk their funeral march, c When every passing breeze seems winged with death; Tis now that earth s deep voice is hushed with fear--When nature stands benumbed, and spectres rule The sleepy hour. Upon the wall, gaunt forms The chamber is darkened; the arras separate, revealing a faintly illumined space beyond, partially concealed by thin drapery. Take shape in ghastly lineament, distort By yonder waning taper light--. Powers of grace! what apparition s that Which my strained...
