Excerpt from Fatigue Effects as Measured by Sugar Content of Blood In table 5 it is shown that the sugar content immediately preceding these tests was lower in each case than in previous determinations. The variation after exercise is less than that between any other two measures except in two cases. We have no explanation for the fall in sugar content unless it is due to seasonal variation,³ such as reported by Strouse The blood pressure and urinalysis add little to the interpretations. It might be argued that emotional excitation in preceding determinations influenced the sugar content. That a child should be so much affected in four or Six blood tests and not in the next can not be assumed. This fall is noted for the children who had supplementary tests and for those who did not. The preceding activities and breakfasts were approximately the same as in preceding tests. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
