As we consider Nnsa s fiscal year 2002 budget request, our second such request since the agency s formation, we want to make sure that NNSA is putting together the best possible program to continue to ensure a strong national deterrent. I know General Gordon has been working tirelessly to bring together his team at the Nnsa and to reorganize the Department of Energy s (Doe) Defense Programs to provide a cohesive management structure that avoids the pitfalls that have plagued these programs in the past. Over the past 2 years, there have been several reports examining programs now in the Nnsa. These reports were critical of DOE s management, security failures, infrastructure, of personnel retention and replacement policies, as well as specific campaigns or projects. The underlying theme through virtually all of the reports was the enormity of the challenges facing Nnsa. Although there was agreement that we have the best and brightest people working on the worlds most impressive science program, there were also deep reservations about the general health of the program. With the formation of the Nnsa, we sought, and continue to seek, a new chance to provide a world-class, science-based nuclear weapons program and matching world-class operations, infrastructure, and workforce to carry us well into the 21st century. As we hear from our witnesses today, I hope...
